

CEMETERY BIRD

Some families are like a car wreck: two die, one is paralyzed, another walks away. Twenty years ago Jay Aubuchon had a front-row seat to her mother's drug addiction and disappearance. As the rest of her family slowly fractured, Jay dropped out of high school and moved from Missouri to Arizona to...

Reader's Opinions

Compelling, layered characters populate this book. Jay Aubuchon spends her life trying to make sense of her family - the mother who disappeared, the bipolar brother, the nephew with autism. It could be sappy melodrama, but the writing keeps everything understated just enough.

After a mishap on a fire-fighting crew Jay returns home to recuperate in the company of her father, sister-in-law, and autistic nephew. Bufford alternates between the present and 1983, when 12-year old Jay is forced to stay with her rigid grandmother after her mother runs away from rehab and a stint in jail. In an effortless transition...
