

OUR MEN DO NOT BELONG TO US

Our Men Do Not Belong to Us is the opening noise of a poet who has already gained a significant amount of praise for her poetry. Warsan Shire's poems are direct, but they are works of such delicate construction and layered insight that one quickly realizes what seems "direct" is necessarily wholly indirect, questioning, uncertain, and vulnerable. Her poems are about how women deal with the violence of all kinds of exploitation, but they are never didactic or simplistic. Shire fills...

Peek Inside the Book

The only darkness we should allow into our lives is the night, for even then, we have the moon. Warsan Shire, Our Men Do Not Belong To Us //

Reader's Opinions

Warsan is gold. This one has the best poems of her other collection + great new additions. I like this one more!
